Claims 1-9 have been examined.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Leon et al. US Patent 6,591,251

As per claim 1,

Leon et al. ('251) discloses a postage meter machine for franking postal items, comprising:

a printer adapted for printing a postage value stamp on a postal item; (column 4, lines 19-23)

a control unit for controlling operation of at least said printer; (Figure 2)

a security module, for debiting postage fee data used for producing said postage value stamp, which must be activated to permit said control unit to control said printer, said security module being electronically connected to said control unit and automatically, multiply interrogating said control unit to require handover of a security code from said control unit to said security module.(column 6, lines 36-43)

Official Notice is taken that "security module automatically deactivating itself, and thereby precluding printing of said postage value stamp, if said control unit hands over an incorrect security code or no security code upon each interrogation" is common and well known in prior art in reference to security systems. It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to include that security module automatically deactivates itself, and thereby precluding printing of said postage value stamp, if said control unit hands over an incorrect security code or no security code upon each interrogation in order to create a more secure system.

As per claim 2,

Leon et al. ('251) discloses a postage meter machine as claimed in claim 1, wherein said security module contains a module computing unit for conducting said multiple interrogations of said control unit, at regular time intervals. (column 5, lines 13-24)

Art Unit: 3621

As per claim 3,

Leon et al. ('251) discloses a postage meter machine as claimed in claim 1. Official Notice is taken that "security module contains a module computing unit for conducting said multiple interrogations of said control unit, at irregular time intervals" is common and well known in prior art in reference to security systems. It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to include a security module containing a module computing unit for conducting said multiple interrogations of said control unit, at irregular time intervals in order to create a more secure system.

As per claim 4,

Leon et al. ('251) discloses a postage meter machine as claimed in claim 1. wherein said security module contains a timer which deactivates said security module after expiration of a time duration following a last handover of a correct security code from said control module, if a further handover of said correct security code does not occur within said time duration. (column 6, lines 51-62)

As per claim 5,

Leon et al. ('251) discloses a postage meter machine as claimed in claim 4.

Official Notice is taken that "wherein said timer randomly varies said time duration" is common and well known in prior art in reference to security systems. It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to vary the timer randomly to create a more secure system.

As per claim 6

Leon et al. ('251) discloses a postage meter machine as claimed in claim 1, wherein said security module, after deactivation, automatically re-activates itself upon handover of a security code from said control unit to said security module. (column 7, lines 1-5)

As per claim 7

Leon et al. ('251) discloses a postage meter machine as claimed in claim 1, wherein said control unit contains hardware having an identifier code associated therewith, and wherein said control unit and said security module use said hardware identifier code as said security code. (column 6, lines 16-19)

As per claim 8

Leon et al. ('251) discloses a postage meter machine as claimed in claim 1, wherein said control unit encrypts said security code, prior to handing said security code over to said control unit, to form an encrypted security code, and wherein said control unit hands over said encrypted security code to said control unit. (column 6, lines 16-34)

As per claim 9

Leon et al. ('251) discloses in a postage meter machine having a control unit for controlling printing of a postage value imprint on a postal item, the improvement of a security module, which must be activated to allow controlling of printing by said control unit, comprising:

at least one security module component for automatically, multiply interrogating said control unit to require handover of a security code from said control unit to said security module, (column 6, lines 36-43)

Official Notice is taken that "deactivating said security module if said control unit hands over an incorrect security code or no security code" is common and well known in prior art in reference to security systems. It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to deactivate said security module if said control unit hands over an incorrect security code or no security code in order to create a more secure system.
